Recovery

office, which no one was in when the twister hit, and he later learned that his accountant had been killed. Stokes saw the area the next day; it was acres of rubble.

"If you had blindfolded me and brought me there, I wouldn't have been able to tell you where we were," he says.

Three of 50 employees had to quit because they lost their homes and needed to focus on rebuilding their lives. Three more were temporarily unable to work. He lost several clients whose homes were destroyed.

THE RECOVERY: Stokes' church offered him office space, and the Visiting Angels franchise in Tulsa, Oklahoma, lent him a car and computer. About a month after the tornado Stokes found an office 12 miles away, in Carthage, Missouri, but he was unable to replace all his lost equipment and cars until he received insurance money six months later.

It took about a year for Stokes' business to return to its pre-disaster functioning. He's still based in Carthage but now has a satellite building in Joplin.

Debt

reports included medical bills in collections.

The study's picture of medical debt had some limitations. It only identified bills that landed in collections. It doesn't show debt paid by other means like credit cards.

WHAT PUSHES THEM THERE: The study didn't delve into the factors, but Ippolito noted that patients in their late 20s probably haven't reached their peak earnings or built up savings, and they are more likely to be uninsured.

Insurance protection also can be limited because some plans require patients to pay thousands of dollars toward a claim before coverage begins.

The extent of a patient's illness and whether they miss work often factor into debt problems, said Erin Singleton of the non-profit Patient Advocate Foundation, which helps critically or chronically ill patients deal with debt and insurance problems. Neither Singleton nor the foundation was involved in the study.

Medical bills also can remain unpaid if patients must feed a family or pay utilities first.

"If it's a matter of paying a medical bill or putting food on the table, they're going to put food on the table," Singleton said.

WHAT TO DO

Take action when bills arrive. Check to make sure your insurer processed the claim correctly. Many invoices list a phone number if patients have questions or need help.

"Don't put a bunch of envelopes on the top of your desk and pretend that they don't exist," Singleton said.

Billing departments typically will work with patients who have payment concerns, said Rita Robinson, a case manager for the advocacy group. They might be able to set up a payment plan or connect you with some discounts or charity that the hospital offers.

Patients can no longer get that help once a bill goes to collections.

Robinson said many patients, especially those with cancer, have more anxiety over the bills they will face than over their actual treatment. They're often worried that the treatments will stop if they can't pay their bills.

"It's very terrifying," she said.

Struggle

care for a medical need because of the cost.

Additionally, roughly 13 percent of families missed a utility bill payment at some point during the year. And 10 percent of families either didn't pay the full amount of their rent or mortgage, or they paid it late.

While startling data to some, it comes as no surprise to those Americans who are struggling to get by.

Debra Poppelaars of Nashville, Tennessee, underwent spinal fusion surgery last fall and was diagnosed with breast cancer shortly thereafter. Although she is insured, she owes roughly $19,000 for her portion of the medical bills.

Between disability, a job change and the mounting debt, she hasn't been able to make ends meet and is now facing bankruptcy.

"It's very hard at 64 years old, I look back and think I am in this position and I should be able to retire," she said.

Bull

(such as international trade disputes, inflation, concern over spiraling deficits, workforce shortages, or the Federal Reserve's ongoing normalization of monetary policy), but at this point I think we'll see continuing growth for the foreseeable future. As long as the economy continues to expand, the bull will likely keep running. Long live the bull!
