Hurricanes

The Army Corps of Engineers said that it is still installing tarps on homes damaged by Hurricane Laura, and will check on and replace if needed those already installed and then hit by Delta in Allen, Beauregard, Calcasieu, Cameron, Jefferson Davis and Vernon parishes. "ALL eligible homeowners within the six affected parishes are eligible to sign-up for a FREE temporary roof ... through Oct. 24," a news release said.

Trahan said Delta tore the blue tarps off his roof, "but I don't think there's a whole lot more damage."

Laura destroyed cinderblock businesses that had withstood Hurricanes Audrey, Rita and Ike, he said.

Trahan said Creole's three four-way stoplights are gone, "but some of the poles are still up. They were the only red lights we had in Cameron Parish. The rest are caution lights."

The Rev. D.B. Thompson, who celebrates Masses at two Catholic churches in the area, including storm-damaged Sacred Heart of Jesus in Creole, said he didn't know whether the Catholic Diocese of Lake Charles will rebuild Sacred Heart. This year's storms did $60 million to $100 million damage across the diocese, he said.

Thompson said fewer people return to Creole, where the population is less than 700, after each hurricane. Cameron, the parish seat, is even smaller - about 400 residents. He expects people to leave after Laura and Delta.

In Our Lady Star of the Sea, the church Vincent attends, Thompson and Canon Jean-Marie Moreau found a candle still lit even after Delta.

"A sign of faith," Thompson said.

The announcement follows a Washington Post report Friday of a major - but ultimately unsuccessful - effort by the U.S. military's Cyber Command to dismantle Trickbot beginning last month with direct attacks rather than asking online services to deny hosting to domains used by command-and-control servers.

A U.S. policy called "persistent engagement" authorizes U.S. cyberwarriors to engage hostile hackers in cyberspace and disrupt their operations with code, something Cybercom did against Russian misinformation jockeys during U.S. midterm elections in 2018.

Created in 2016 and used by a loose consortium of Russian-speaking cybercriminals, Trickbot is a digital superstructure for sowing malware in the computers of unwitting individuals and websites. In recent months, its operators have been increasingly renting it out to other criminals who have used it to sow ransomware, which encrypts data on target networks, crippling them until the victims pay up.

Gas

Continued from front page heightened tensions with Turkey and is fraught with political and logistical challenges. It could prove infeasible if gas prices remain low and Europe accelerates its shift to renewable energy.

At the time of the 2015 gas deal, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu promised "hundreds of millions of shekels for education, welfare, health and for every Israeli citizen," but a hoped-for sovereign wealth fund has yet to materialize because revenues have been lower than expected.

Stocks

Continued from front page Researchers say increased investment by racial minorities in the stock market, carried through future generations, could help narrow the wealth gap. Toward that end, industry groups are trying to encourage more Black people to become financial planners, who could then draw in potential investors.

Instead of stocks, wealthier Black households are more likely to own safer investments, such as bonds, life insurance or real estate, said Tatjana Meschede, associate director at Brandeis University's Institute on Assets and Social Policy.

The largest bond fund has returned less than 40% over the last decade. That's far below the nearly 257% that the largest stock fund has delivered over the same time. Real estate has also had slower gains.

Malcolm Ethridge, a financial adviser in the Washington area, regularly sees a reluctance to invest in stocks among Black people with enough money to do so.

"My personal opinion is Black Americans tend not to trust things that are not tangible because of our history in this country and things being taken away," Ethridge said. "It gets passed on to you from generation to generation: to only trust and believe in things you can actually touch."

"A house, I can put my hands on that and believe in that, whereas a stock is just whatever someone else tells me it's worth, and I just have to take your word for it."
