Summary

This is a suit for adverse possession of real property. The property is owned by James and Joanna Campa. In May 1989, Plaintiff leased the property from a third party that had a valid lease-hold interest in the prop-erty from the Campa at that time. Plaintiff paid monthly rent and all property taxes. In 1996, Plaintiff attempted to sell his business. At that time, it was discovered that the third party no longer held a valid leasehold inter-est and did not own the property. Plaintiff continued to pay all real property taxes due on the property. Plain-tiff attempted to contact the Campas without success. The Campas have never con-tacted Plaintiff

Plaintiff now desires to sell the business. Plaintiff hired an investigator to locate the Campas or their heirs. No living heirs were identified. Joanna Campa dies in 1992. James Campa died in 2002. There is no evidence of a probate action in the name of James or Joanna Campa in either Harris County, Texas or Angelina County, Texas, the only known resi-dences of James and Joanna Campa. The Court appoint-ed an attorney ad litem to represent the unknown heirs of Campa, but that attorney

Draft

Arguing for the government, U.S. Justice Department lawyer Claire Murray said lower courts don't have the authority to overturn the Supreme Court precedent.

She added that the courts must defer to Congress in matters governing the military draft. Congress has not moved to require women to register.

She said Congress has legitimate considerations in determining whether to draft women in the event of a wartime emergency necessitating the return of conscription. Those considerations include anticipated mortality rates for women in combat, and the need for equipment and facilities for women drafted in equal numbers to men.

Those arguments are of little consequence, Weiner said, if the court holds that the 1981 Supreme Court ruling constitutes an insurmountable precedent.

The appeals panel is considering whether to uphold a Texas-based federal judge's 2019 ruling that the men-only draft is unconstitutional. It did not indicate when it would rule.

The U.S. government stopped drafting young men into the military in 1973. But every male must still register for the draft when he turns 18.

On March 25, a federal commission is scheduled to release a final report and recommendations on the draft — including whether the nation still needs a draft registration system, whether women should be required to register and whether other changes are needed.

The commission's chairman, former Republican U.S. Rep. Joe Heck of Nevada, has publicly supported requiring women to register for the draft.

"The Commission has been following this case as it progresses, making our work all the more relevant and important," Heck said in an emailed statement Monday.

Angelucci told the court Tuesday he will pursue the case no matter what the commission recommends.

tion's head of quality and patient safety. But there are no good alternatives to masks for nurses and doctors.

Malls and sports arenas are adding more hand sanitizer stations. And some workplaces have said they are stocking up, too.

Purell, the best-selling hand sanitizer, is pumping up production. Walmart and other stores say they are talking to suppliers to stock up bare shelves, but didn't say how long that could take.

Purell says it has seen higher demand from health care facilities in addition to stores. It is adding more shifts and having employees work overtime at the two Ohio facilities where most Purell is made, says Samantha Williams, a spokeswoman for its parent company Gojo Industries.

Bath & Body Works, which sells hand sanitizers with scents like "vanilla rose" and "pineapple colada," says its been able to keep bottles in stock at its 1,700 stores. An executive for Bath & Body Works owner L Brands said last week that hand sanitizers made up 5% of its total business and that it's growing "at a very high rate."

Walmart has seen higher demand for cleaning supplies and other items, similar to when shoppers start preparing for a hurricane. The world's largest retailer says it is working with suppliers to stock up again on those items, including hand sanitizer.

At a Costco in Los Angeles Tuesday, hand sanitizer was gone and shoppers clogged the back of the cavernous store where workers were wheeling out pallet after pallet of bottled water. "Don't believe the hype," one worker shouted.

On Amazon, most hand sanitizers were gone. Those that were left was seriously overpriced, even though the company has said it was policing its site for price gougers. Two 8-ounce bottles of Purell, for example, were being offered for $119 by a third-party seller; such vendors can list their items for sale on Amazon.com directly.

Gaelen Gates says she trekked to two Walgreens, a Safeway and a CVS this week and couldn't find any hand sanitizer.

The attorney, who lives in San Francisco, is not worried about the new virus, she's just trying to avoid getting a cold at a music and film festival she plans to attend later this month in Austin, Texas.

If she can't find any by the time of her trip, she has a plan: wash her hands more frequently and "try not to touch anything."
