Death

He was only tested for the virus the day before he died, said daughter-in-law Shelley Brandt.

Brandt said she wonders why a COVID-19 test was not given to her father-in-law sooner.

"It's my understanding he did not meet the criteria and the only criteria he did not meet is that he had not been out of the country," Brandt told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "Just because he was not out the country does not mean the man in front of him at the hardware store had not been out of the country. If someone checks all the boxes except one, that should be a red flag."

The vast majority of people recover from the virus. According to the World Health Organization, people with mild illness recover in about two weeks, while those with more severe illness may take three to six weeks to recover.

Spanish

ties already face barriers to health care, including fear of seeking treatment because of their immigration status.

"The lack of bilingual material sort of exacerbates some of those issues that create uneven access to information and services," Saenz said.

To help, an advocacy group is providing workers at a day labor work center in Pasadena, California, with information in Spanish to help them reduce their risk of infection and be ready in case they get sick or the government orders a lockdown. The National Day Laborer Organizing Network also streamed a radio show on social media dedicated to the virus, addressing hygiene strategies, how to talk with children about the disease and the drastic drop in hirings the center has seen.

"I prefer the information in Spanish because it is our language," said Carlos, a day laborer who was getting information at the center and didn't want to share his last name out of fear he would be targeted by immigration authorities. "They are advising us on how to act, and how to get ready to face this, especially those of us who have children, so that we don't take this home because the children are out of school."

Spanish-language media outlet Noticias Telemundo says it's adding a national weekday newscast focused on the coronavirus. It's also expanding its morning show and midday newscast to include segments on the virus.

While states have started adding Spanish to their health department websites, it can be hard to find. A day after The Associated Press asked the New Mexico governor's office about a lack of Spanish on the health department website, it's Spanish-language site went live and Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham tweeted about it in Spanish. A purple-highlighted banner atop the website's main page has, in small letters, a link to Spanish updates.

The nation's most Hispanic state also has had a Spanish educator and health official at every news conference to do an interviews with Spanish-language media.

The outreach to Spanish-speaking communities has been mixed. The federal government has done little, but the CDC does have coronavirus information available in Spanish on its website, although it is hard to find.

Voting

first lasted 50 minutes.

McConnell put his foot down Tuesday against remote voting, saying, "We'll not be doing that."

"We will deal with the social distancing issue without fundamentally changing Senate rules," McConnell said.

Pelosi, D-Calif., whose hometown of San Francisco is among many Bay Area communities whose residents have been ordered to stay home, has also opposed the idea.

Worden

After returning from the moon, all three Apollo 15 astronauts became embroiled in a controversy over a few hundred stamped postal covers that flew with them to the moon. The astronauts planned to sell them to help pay for their children's education, Worden said in the NASA oral history.

Worden said he assumed the stamped covers were on the official flight manifest, but wasn't sure now that they ever were. All this resulted in "quite a flap."

None of the three ever flew in space again. He blamed NASA management.

"Some senator or some congressman asked the question, and they caved under right away and tried to get rid of us," he said in the oral history. "Nobody stood up for us. Nobody."

Worden sued the U.S. government in 1983 and got his covers back.

"We probably didn't do the smartest thing in the world, but we didn't do anything that was illegal," he said. "We didn't do anything that anybody else hadn't done, but the consequences were rather severe to us."
