DAILY COURT REVIEW

Abortion

violate a March 17 order issued by the state health director.

Clinics, abortion rights groups and some state lawmakers pushed back, saying abortions are both essential and time-sensitive.

"During an emergency, there is always a chance of government overreach under the guise of 'security' or adherence to 'law and order,'" the Ohio Democratic Women's Legislative Caucus said in a statement. "In times of national crisis, we have seen egregious acts that have circumvented our freedoms before. And make no mistake - we are seeing them today."

Bethany McCorkle, a spokesman for Yost, said the orders sent to three clinic operators are not political. She said they were sent in response to complaints and similar to those sent to a urology practice that was also violating the order.

He pointed to New Mexico's overall rig counts, reaching 116 rigs - a record - and growing to 117 in March, an increase over March 2019's average of 105 rigs.

But until the virus is contained and the price war between Saudi Arabia and Russia is resolved, McEntyre said the industry faced uncertainty.

"Our companies are making choices to modify their short-term business plan to make sure they can survive this business environment," he said. "There's no question the ripple effect is impacting our industry and others. Because of the uncertainty, the short-term is challenging."

ENFORCEMENT BEGINS: Wolf's order to close down the physical locations of businesses deemed not essential to sustain life is being enforced as of Monday morning.

The Wolf administration has been sorting through nearly 10,000 waiver requests, saying their only consideration is health and safety.

State police spokesman Ryan Tarkowski said Monday that troopers are aiming at voluntary compliance, "not coming in with a hammer at 8:01" a.m., when the enforcement period began.

"Our goal is not to write a giant pile of citations," he said.

Tarkowski said people who want to report a business that remains open should use non-emergency numbers to call state police or local police. "Please don't call 911," Tarkowski said.

Crossings

Silva said he hasn't accepted more migrants and has kept the shelter in quarantine to avoid infections but that migrants continue to arrive in Reynosa.

Meanwhile, in the U.S., immigrant advocates filed a lawsuit in Washington D.C. requesting the immediate release of migrant families from detention facilities over concerns of inadequate care and an environment ripe for an outbreak. They say the country's three detention centers where families are held - Berks in Pennsylvania, and Karnes and Dilley in Texas - have failed to take adequate measures to protect families from COVID-19.

Immigration enforcement has wide latitude on when to release migrants. Earlier this year, Homeland Security officials said they would detain families as long as possible in an effort to discourage migrants from crossing the border. Most families are held 20 days.

"The families who are detained in these detention centers facilities have no criminal history and do not pose any threat whatsoever to public safety and are not a flight risk - they all came to the United States to seek asylum and are actively pursuing the right to remain in the United States," the advocacy groups wrote.

ICE has said it is working to contain any spread of the virus in its detention facilities. The agency did not comment on the lawsuit. Immigration courts are still operating, but with scattered closures and delays in some hearings.

For most people, the new coronavirus causes only mild or moderate symptoms, such as fever and cough. For some, especially older adults and people with existing health problems, it can cause more severe illness, including pneumonia. More than 300,000 have been infected worldwide.

The vast majority of people recover from the new virus. According to the World Health Organization, people with mild illness recover in about two weeks, while those with more severe illness may take three to six weeks to recover.

Curbing immigration has been a signature policy of Trump's, and he's tried to block asylum seekers before but failed after courts ruled against him. On Sunday, a text from his re-election campaign read: "Pres. Trump is making your safety his #1 priority. That's why we're closing BORDERS to illegals."
