gunk washed from their feathers.

Sediment dredged from the Calcasieu Ship Channel raised and expanded the island, which lies about 6 miles (10 kilometers) from Louisiana's southwestern coast, in a cove of Calcasieu Lake.

Twelve species nested there this year, 10 of them considered "species of greatest conservation need" by Louisiana. All were among species hardest hit by the BP oil spill, the coastal authority said.

Grasses and shrubs will be planted to make it even more attractive to the birds.

The project started as a collaboration between Cameron and Calcasieu parishes, said state Rep. Ryan Bourriaque, a Republican from Cameron Parish.

21% below the median. An American Airlines flight on another Boeing 737 from San Francisco to New York with a stop in Dallas emits 535 kilograms of carbon dioxide, 9% less than the median for that route.

Multiple stops can often result in an increase in emissions, but it's not always the case. Non-stop flights aren't always less polluting, particularly on longer routes. Google says that a more fuel-efficient plane can emit less on a multiple-stop journey than an older plane on a non-stop route.

Ginsburg

previously.

"It was on the verge of falling through and it struck me as something that should be out there," said John Wohlstetter, the foundation's president, who said his organization offered a "modest sum" to help keep the project afloat. "It's the arts in general. We are living in a time, frankly, when a lot of the culture is in the sewer. I don't think any of us are better off for that. It is good to have some new modern work."

Yet in the end, Biegel said, a group of enthusiastic lawyers, fittingly enough, pulled the Ginsberg project across the finish line.

"It's the greatest topic with the greatest team behind it," said one of them, Todd Wiener, of Evanston, Illinois.

"I just want to help get them started," Wiener said. "I would twist arms of a lot of people I know in the legal community to make donations to make sure everything is there for them."

"Remembering Ruth Bader Ginsburg" was written by Zwilich, the first woman to win the Pulitzer Prize for music composition. Graves, who won a Grammy Award for best opera recording in 2020 as a soloist in "Gershwin: Porgy and Bess," performed during Ginsburg's memorial service. And Biegel was the pianist for Kenneth Fuchs' Grammy-winning piano concerto, "Spiritualist," in 2019.

Sunil Iyengar, director of research at the National Endowment for the Arts, noted that the complications of dealing with COVID-19 can be overwhelming for some arts groups and require innovative solutions.

"There really is a need to find other, new means of revenue and some social transformation," Iyengar said. "If there isn't substantial support for the arts recovery, we're talking about potentially depriving whole generations of artists, arts workers, arts audiences and arts learners — and then we're impoverishing our nation's cultural, emotional and intellectual life."

Biegel said the Ginsburg project has benefited from a wide range of philanthropic support — and not just financial help. Numerous artists have contributed their Ginsburg-inspired art to help raise awareness of the piece. He asked Harrison Shekeler, one of his students from Brooklyn College, to orchestrate Biegel's own Ginsburg-inspired piece.

"I told him, 'I have no money to offer, but if you do this, any rentals or purchases of this arrangement will be split with you.'"

Biegel, who will also perform his own composition "Reflection of Justice: An Ode to Ruth Bader Ginsburg" as part of the Dallas program, said he is thrilled that the world will soon get to hear "Remembering Ruth Bader Ginsburg."

It represents, he said, not just a collaboration of artists but also of donors.

"It's a lot of work," Biegel said. "I don't get paid for doing it. I tell everyone — and I don't mean it in a disrespectful way, I mean it in a very positive and productive way — this is not about you."

"This piece may make it, it may not," he said. "It may become popular 50 years from now. That's just the way it is. This is about the future."
