ing vessels manned by better-paid, sometimes well-armed Puerto Rican drug runners.

Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas said in testimony before a Senate committee that an Air and Marine Operations agent was killed and several other agents were "gravely wounded."

"These are brave members of our Air and Marine Operations within U.S. Customs and Border Protection," Mayorkas said. "So the difficulty of this job cannot be compared to the difficulty that our frontline personnel face every day. Their bravery and selfless service should be recognized."

Air and Marine Operations employs about 1,650 people and is one of the smaller units of CBP, the largest law enforcement agency in the United States that also includes the Border Patrol. It works to stop the illegal movement of people, drugs and other goods.

The unit detected 218 "conventional aircraft incursions" on U.S. soil in the 2021 fiscal year, seized 1.1 million pounds of narcotics, $73.1 million in illicit currency, made more than 122,000 arrests and recued 518 people, according to CBP.

Execution

bed. Prosecutors say Fairchild held both sides of Adam's body against a scorching furnace, then threw him into a table. The child never regained consciousness and died later that day.

Strapped to a gurney inside the death chamber, Fairchild thanked his attorneys and prison staff and apologized to Adam's family.

"Today's a day for Adam, justice for Adam," Fairchild said.

"I'm at peace with God. Don't grieve for me because I'm going home to meet my heavenly father."

Michael Hurst, the slain child's uncle, said the boy would have been 34.

"Our long journey for justice has finally arrived," Hurst said, adding that he was surprised to hear Fairchild express remorse for killing his nephew. "He hadn't said that in 30 years."

Prosecutors from the Oklahoma attorney general's office had described the boy's killing as torture when they wrote to the state's Pardon and Parole Board, which voted 4-1 last month against recommending clemency for Fairchild.

Attorneys for Fairchild argued that he was abused as a child, was mentally ill and was remorseful.

"As Richard Fairchild's brain has deteriorated, he has descended into psychosis, a fact well-documented in his prison records," Emma Rolls, one of Fairchild's attorneys, said in a statement to the Pardon and Parole Board. "Yet despite having lost touch with reality, Richard remains remorseful for his crime and continues to have an unblemished prison record. There is no principled reason for Oklahoma to execute him."

Fairchild's attorneys filed last-minute appeals Wednesday with Oklahoma's Court of Criminal Appeals and the U.S. Supreme Court, but both courts denied his requests Thursday.

Also Thursday, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals denied a request from death row inmate Richard Glossip for a hearing to determine whether a co-defendant sought to recant his testimony that Glossip hired him to kill motel owner Barry Van Treese. Glossip's execution is scheduled for February.

for Native Americans, tribal gambling operations and public education for Native students if the justices dismantle tribes' political relationship with the U.S. government.

STATES THAT HAVE CODIFIED ICWA

At least 10 states have incorporated aspects of the federal Indian Child Welfare Act into their own laws, according to Turtle Talk, a blog that covers legal issues affecting tribal communities. They are:

CALIFORNIA
IOWA
MICHIGAN
NEBRASKA
NEW MEXICO
OKLAHOMA
OREGON
WISCONSIN

Whether these laws will stand depends on what the court decides, particularly if the decision centers on a racial versus a political classification for Native American tribes.

"The states can only treat Indians as a political classification to the extent that the feds can," said Dan Lewerenz, assistant law professor at the University of North Dakota who is a member of the Iowa Tribe of Kansas and Nebraska.
