DAILY COURT REVIEW

Migrants

open-ended nature of our request." and that a more specific one would help.

"We want to continue to work with the Department of Defense so that they understand our operational needs and to assure that political considerations are not a part of their decision," Bowser said, adding that she believes the "crisis" will only worsen. "We need the National Guard. If we were a state, I would have already done it."

A coalition of local charitable groups has been working to feed and shelter the migrants, aided by a $1 million grant from FEMA. But organizers have been warning that both their resources and personnel were nearing exhaustion.

"This reliance on NGOs is not working and is unsustainable – they are overwhelmed and underfunded," Bowser said in her letter. She has repeatedly stated that the influx is stressing her government's ability to care for its own homeless residents and now requires a federal response.

Bowser sharply criticized Abbott and Ducey, accusing them of "cruel political gamesmanship" and saying the pair had "decided to use desperate people to score political points."

Explaining his decision to add New York City as a destination, Abbott said that Biden's "refusal to acknowledge the crisis caused by his open border policies" forced Texas to "take unprecedented action to keep our communities safe."

He said the migrants are being dropped off at the Port Authority Bus Terminal.

"In addition to Washington, D.C., New York City is the ideal destination for these migrants, who can receive the abundance of city services and housing that Mayor Eric Adams has boasted about within the sanctuary city," Abbott said.

In response, Fabien Levy, spokesman for Adams, tweeted that Abbott's "continued use of human beings as political pawns is disgusting. NYC will continue to welcome asylum seekers w/ open arms, as we have always done, but we still need support from DC."

As mayor of D.C., Bowser does not have the authority to personally order a National Guard deployment, an issue that has become emotionally charged in recent years as a symbol of the district's entrenched status as less than a state.

Her limited authority played a role in the Jan. 6, 2021, insurrection at the U.S. Capitol by supporters of former President Donald Trump. When it became clear that Capitol Police were overmatched by the crowds, Bowser couldn't immediately deploy the district guard. Instead, crucial time was lost while the request was considered inside the Pentagon, and protesters rampaged through the building.

have become "quite a prolific mode of transportation" for residents and visitors to the island resort area, which is located on the Gulf of Mexico.

Brown said that the city has in the past put in place ordinances aimed at making them safer, and will be considering additional ordinances at an upcoming City Council meeting.

"I was out last night," Brown said. "The island was busy and there were golf carts – residential as well as rental golf carts – out all over these streets."

based in Stuttgart, Germany. The Senate confirmed his appointment on Monday.

"The milestone and what it means to the Corps is quite essential," Langley said during Saturday's ceremony, according to a Marine Corps report. "Not because the mark in history, but what it will affect going forward, especially for those younger across society that want to aspire and look at the Marine Corps as an opportunity."

Study

The new study doesn't do the calculations to attribute specific disease changes, odds or magnitude to climate change, but finds cases where extreme weather was a likely factor among many. The study did map out the 1,006 connections from climate hazard to illness.

Study lead author Camilo Mora, a climate data analyst at the University of Hawaii, said what is important to note is that the study isn't about predicting future cases.

"There is no speculation here whatsoever," Mora said. "These are things that have already happened."
