per day can come in to submit work permit applications.

The reason for the ballooning number of migrants in these cities is complicated, but economic and climate-related hardships in their home countries are key drivers. There are increasing numbers of families arriving and asking for asylum.

Some conservative-leaning states have sent migrants to so-called sanctuary cities such as New York or Chicago, where laws are more favorable to noncitizens. But that alone does not explain why the cities are facing such increases.

In years past, when migrants arrived, they would be released and picked up by nonprofit groups before usually going to stay with a relative already in the U.S. But the nationalities of the people arriving have changed, and many no longer have any place to go.

Winning asylum is a long and difficult process through a badly clogged immigration court system. In some cases, migrants may wait up to a decade for a court date. They are released into the U.S. to wait. Some are eligible to work, but such authorizations are badly delayed. There are concerns, too, that allowing too much work authorization will encourage more people to make the dangerous journey to the U.S. on foot. So thousands are in limbo, unable to work, sleeping in shelters or government facilities.

Exxon said in a statement that the proposed deal with Texas-based Pioneer Resources would enhance U.S. energy security and benefit the American economy and consumers.

"For all those concerned about competition, the fact that the two companies combined represent about 5% of U.S. oil production should set their mind at ease. For all those who seek even greater U.S. energy independence and far lower emissions, this merger represents nothing but upside for our economy and our environment," the company said.

Chevron said its proposed deal with New York-based Hess would strengthen long-term performance while "delivering higher returns and lower carbon" dioxide emissions that contribute to global warming.

Both deals must be approved by federal regulators.

Environmental groups hailed the call for an investigation of what some called "merger mania" within the oil industry that threatens competition.

"Big Oil getting bigger is a threat to our climate and our democracy," said Lukas Ross, senior program manager at Friends of the Earth. "The proposed mergers would supercharge Exxon and Chevron's outsized political power, allowing them to lock-in another generation" of planet-warming greenhouse gas emissions, he said. "The FTC has every reason to act."

President of the United States and the United States Congress from fulfilling their constitutional roles by certifying President Biden's victory, and to illegally extend then-President Trump's tenure in office," the petitioners wrote.

Trump's lawyers acknowledged in their filings that the question of whether he "is suited to hold the Presidency has been the defining political controversy of our national life" for the last several years. They've also argued that while the events of Jan. 6 devolved into a riot, they were not an insurrection in the constitutional sense.

Trump's lawyers noted that the Republican former president has never been charged in any court with insurrection — although he does face state and federal criminal charges for his attempts to overturn his 2020 loss to Biden, a Democrat.

north to south?"

More than 2 million people crossed the border illegally between October 2022 and September 2023, according to Border Patrol data. For the most part, doctors told The Associated Press, the migrants are healthy; they have to be to make the arduous journey. It's the travel that can turn manageable health issues into emergencies.

Because of that, public health leaders across the country — from New York to Los Angeles, Boston to Denver — say there's high demand for care. And providing it is central to their organizations' missions.

"It's so core to what we do that I don't feel like anyone's really hesitated around this is the right thing for the organization to do," said Craig Williams, chief administrative officer of Cook County's health system. "I don't feel like over the last year that we've backed off from really anything else because of doing this initiative."
