leading to shock and frustration even in areas that have backed Trump.

The warehouse plan ran into challenges from the start. Eight deals were scuttled in places like Kansas City, Missouri, when owners decided not to sell.

Pressed on the lack of information during his confirmation hearing, Mullin acknowledged there had been issues.

"We've got to protect the homeland and we're going to do that," Mullin said. "But obviously we want to work with community leaders."

Mullin, who took over and expanded his family's plumbing business before representing Oklahoma in the U.S House and Senate, said that "one thing I do know is construction."

He noted that most municipalities don't have the capacity in their infrastructure for waste and water.

"So, it's important that we're talking to the communities and if we're having additional needs, we can work with the cities," he said at his confirmation hearing earlier this month.

AI slop

Much of this AI-generated content is fast-paced with bright colors, lively music and clickbait titles that work to grab the attention of young viewers, the letter outlines. There has been a growing movement online against AI-generated content, particularly when it looks or feels low quality or leans into the meaninglessness of "brainrot."

Spokesperson Boot Bullwinkle said in a statement that YouTube has "high standards for the content in YouTube Kids, including limiting AI-generated content in the app to a small set of high-quality channels."

"We also provide parents the option to block channels. Across YouTube, we prioritize transparency when it comes to AI content, labeling content from our own AI tools, and requiring creators to disclose realistic AI content," Bullwinkle said. "We're always evolving our approach to stay current as the ecosystem evolves."

YouTube's current policy regarding AI-generated content requires creators to disclose when content that's "realistic" is made with altered or synthetic media, including generative AI. Creators are not required to disclose when generative AI is used to create content that is clearly unrealistic, including animated videos and those with special effects.

Where it's most commonly used

In the Middle East, countries such as Kuwait and Oman source more than 85% of their drinking water from desalination, according to a 2022 report by the French Institute of International Relations think tank.

It's also widely used in parts of Africa and Australia, as well as in the U.S., particularly in drought prone coastal areas like California and Texas. In some Pacific Island nations, where rising seas have contaminated groundwater with salt, desalination is becoming an increasingly important source of freshwater.

More than 20,000 desalination plants now operate worldwide, and the industry has been expanding at about 7% annually since 2010, according to the International Desalination and Reuse Association.

Arizona Secretary of State Adrian Fontes said the state's vote-by-mail system was designed by Republicans and is now used by 80% of voters. Arizona doesn't need the federal government to tell it who can vote, and federal data isn't always reliable, he said.

"It is just wrongheaded for a president of the United States to pretend like he can pick his own voters," Fontes told The Associated Press. "That's just not how America works."

Maine Secretary of State Shenna Bellows told the AP that the order was "laughably unconstitutional" and said her state would not comply. More than a quarter of Maine voters cast mail-in ballots in the 2024 election.

Nevada Secretary of State Francisco Aguilar said Trump's order would cripple local election officials charged with implementing it and silence voters counting on casting a mail ballot.

"It doesn't benefit anybody in this country except himself," Aguilar said.

Legal experts noted other potential flaws with the order. David Becker, a former Justice Department lawyer who leads the Center for Election Innovation and Research, said the Postal Service is run by a board of governors, and the president has no power to tell it what mail it can and cannot deliver.
